DISCOVERING THE RIGHT CURRICULUM FOR YOU

1.) Time: How much time to you have to devote to planning our daily/weekly lessons?

Be honest here. If you only have 1 child, you may have time to create your own curriculum and dive deep, but if you have 3, it may be a different story. Are you working part time or own your own business? Take into consideration all your regular responsibilities. This is a big commitment and you need to realistic.

2) Your temperament/personality: How does your style affect homeschool?

If you like working out details and planning, then a curriculum that has just the basic ideas may be for you. Otherwise, something that has daily lessons plans may be more to your liking. If you are organized you can pull from different sources. When you are just beginning, a laid our curriculum is very helpful to make sure you cover all your subjects.

3) Cost: What is your budget?

This may also be a factor depending on how many grades you need to purchase. Some are reasonable; others are much more of an investment. You can always check the used curriculum & supplies yahoo group for used books and curriculum. And you can sell yours back when you are through. (please check rules for the forum as well as for your curriculum).
